The Mutialappa family will suffer greater damage in the case of climate change than people living Europe because richer countries are able to adapt to the changes. Europe can prepare the society for climate changes by rebuilding and restructuring the farming industry, roads and other parts of the infrastructure.

Poorer countries may not have the needed financial resources to restructure the society in order to meet the climate changes. In addition, poorer countries are often less industrialized and thereby more economically dependent on primary industries like agriculture, forestry and fishing. The conditions for such activities are vulnerable for climate changes.
